

User guide

- About page, what the product is, why to use it, what this guide covers
- Overview of the product components
  - Description of the course blocks and other UI components, short reference style, a screenshot with numbers that correspond to the component list.
- Task-based guides on the main things that people would want to do with hiCreo. Possibly things such as:
  - Getting started (reuse the Quick Start below)
  - Creating custom course templates (or importing existing)
  - Managing course metadata, like tags or archiving
  - Integrating with an LMS for things like course enrollment
- Help section
  - Details for further help, such as if there is a forum or support process
  - Account details like logging in, adding users, billing

Quick start

A short demonstration of how to use the product with a sample scenario, as "end to end" as possible for the brevity...maybe 5 minutes to go through.

Select a course theme, build a course framework, publish the course, send out an invite or link to the course

Have actual demo content that they can use

Internal resources

Style guide for consistency

Terms for UI components

- For example, you might choose to call the top bar the "Menu bar." And the hamburger menu might be called the "Home menu." The message bell might be called the "Message center." This way, when you refer to things across marketing, user guides, and other content, it's consistent.

Guidance for formatting

- For example, will headings be "Title Case" or "Sentence case"?
- Consistent style for callouts like notes, tips, warnings